

I believe that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Since the implementation of our law, we have received very few calls from solicitors. My office is in my home, and my home phone would ring 5 times per day from with telemarketing calls prior to the law. Most of the time, it was a predictive dialer, and no one would even answer on the other end. Since the inception of this law, I receive less than 2 calls a month. It lets me concentrate on what is important rather than answering a phone when no one is on the other end of the line.

Thank you for listening to my comments.
